THEIR LITTLE SCHEME

Lovers Take Time by The Forelock and Earn Honeymoon Money.

BY FRANK FILON.

"But a whole year is an eternity, Muriel," pleaded Frank Crawford, as he bade good-by to his fiancée, Muriel Lee, upon the stoop of her boarding house. "Why have you so strong an objection to getting furniture on the installment plan? There are several perfectly reputable firms and it won't be such a great drain on our income."

Muriel was adamant. "My dear," she said for the twentieth time, "I won't start married life in debt. We've got to have two hundred dollars to begin to furnish our apartment. Now, you be patient, and I will be, and we'll each save up a hundred during the coming twelvemonth."

Frank went away disconsolate and Muriel went to bed and cried herself to sleep.

But on the next evening Frank was back, jubilant. In his hand he held a copy of the evening paper.

"Look, dearest," he cried, thrusting it before her eyes. "Do you see this? Mumford & Curtis have promised a hundred dollars to the first one of their employees to get married. And Caber & Roche, not to be outdone, have made a similar offer. Now, then!"

"But, my dear boy, you aren't an employee of either firm," protested Muriel.

"No, but don't you know I can arrange to begin my vacation tomorrow morning? And those department firms always want help of some kind. Why, tomorrow morning I can get a position at eight dollars a week as a packer, and we'll get married at noon."

"Suppose they don't pay?" "Of course they'll pay. Why, the newspapers will be full of the story. They won't dare go back on their agreement."

"But the newspapers!" said Muriel, pouting.

"But a hundred dollars!" said Frank. "Muriel, darling, won't a single hundred do?"

"Well," said Muriel, after an interval of thought, "if you can really get that position I'll—I'll meet you at the marriage license bureau at half-past twelve. Which firm are you going to try?"

"You Want a Job?" Queried the Woman Superintendent.

"Mumford & Curtis," answered Frank. "I know a man in the packing department. He'll take me on."

"You're sure it won't be Caber & Roche?"

"Sure. Why?"

"Oh, nothing. I just wanted to know," said Muriel. And they spent the evening figuring out what a hundred dollars would buy. Frank Lee left her in high glee at eleven o'clock. On his way home he read and re-read the newspaper paragraph a dozen times, to make sure that he had not deceived himself.

His first act on awakening was to read it again. His second was to telephone to the office, asking that his vacation might be counted as commencing from that morning. To effect this was easy, for he was one of a large force of clerks in the big life insurance office where he was employed, and his work could easily be undertaken by others. Then he put on an old suit and went down to the big department store of Mumford & Curtis, which stands, as everybody knows, at Seventh avenue and Hollis street.

He had intended to apply to his friend, the assistant head of the packing department, but on second thoughts he decided that this might lay him open to suspicion. So he went, instead to the mailing department.

"You want a job?" queried the woman superintendent. "What can you do?"

"I've had some clerical experience," answered Frank. "I need a job in the worst kind of way," he added. "I'm willing to start in at anything so that I can get employment here." He had never spoken more truly.

"Well," said the superintendent, "I believe they want some addressers just now. Write your name on this piece of paper. That's all right. Now I'll take you to Mr. Briggs."

Yes, Mr. Briggs could use an addresser. But the pay was only eight dollars a week. However, there would be chances of advancement.

"Would you mind giving me a written engagement?" asked Frank glibly. "Just a line to say that I am engaged here, so that I can show it to my landlady, or to anyone who wants proof that I have a position?"

"He fell for it," Frank announced to Muriel later. "He tumbled right in. Well, I worked at full blast till noon. I had to work, Muriel, to keep from jumping up and shouting. And at the stroke of the hour I was up and out of the office and across the square and down town on a surface car—and here I am."

And Muriel, blushing divinely, entered the office of the marriage license registrar with him, and five minutes later they emerged, carrying the coveted paper that gave them the right to be made one, and stood up before the minister and were actually one. And then:

"Come along to Mr. Mumford," cried Frank, seizing his wife round the waist and waiting down the steps with her, to the amazement of passersby.

Twenty-five minutes later they were in the presence of the head of the great firm himself. Something about Frank's face, something in his attitude, had so impressed his secretaries, door keepers and office boys that he had passed them unscathed.

"Well, sir?" inquired Mr. Mumford, turning round in his chair. "Be seated, madam. What can I do for you?"

"You can hand me a check for a hundred dollars," answered Frank, blithely. "We were married this morning—and here's the certificate." He slapped it down before him.

"Bless me!" exclaimed Mr. Mumford. "This is very sudden. Are you Mr. Percy Higgins in the accounting department?"

"No, sir, I'm Frank Crawford of the mailing department."

"I never heard of you in my life," replied Mr. Mumford severely.

"I'm surprised at that," answered Frank, solemnly. "Why, Mr. Briggs engaged me to address envelopes this very morning."

"What? What? You were only engaged this morning?"

"I believe, Mr. Mumford, that your offer made no reference to length of service. Of course, if it was not meant I can obtain a position with Messrs. Caber & Roche." And Frank turned on his heel.

"Stop!" shouted Mr. Mumford. "Have you actually had the nerve to—Why, I'll have to offer a hundred dollars again if I pay you—if I pay you. Confound you, why didn't you play this trick on Caber & Roche?"

"I attended to them," spoke up Muriel quietly. "I worked there as a wrapper this morning in the brass goods department. We thought we'd get the money from you first and then hurry over there. You see, Mr. Mumford," she said, pleadingly, "we want to start our honeymoon this afternoon."

Mr. Mumford was choking with laughter.

"Jeffreys!" he called to his secretary. "Make out a voucher for a hundred dollars and take this lady and gentleman to the cashier's office. And say, Jeffreys, call up our advertising manager. I want to add something to our notice. And that," he added, turning to Frank, "will make Caber & Roche 'come through.' A happy honeymoon to both of you!"

Story of the Nerviest Doctor.

"Shortly after I started in practice," relates a physician on the Kansas side, "our next door neighbor came over to our house one evening and asked to use the telephone. He called a downtown doctor and asked him to come out at once. In a few minutes he was back to ask my wife to come over until help could reach them from the city."

"The M. D. having arrived, neighbor was back to request the loan of my case of instruments. The other doctor, coming without his emergency bag, was unprepared."

"I thought this limit, but presently he made a fourth trip, bringing his small son along this time. He kindly pointed out the fact that having my own child to look after it would be less bother to have them both, as they could amuse each other."

"Is there a nervier case on record?" he challenged.

"One," replied the householder.

"Agents make life miserable in our ward, but the most persistent one I have had to deal with recently was selling a door plate which read:

"Positively No Agents!"

Mean Thing.

They (of course were girls) were talking (of course in the nicest manner possible) about a third girl—a mutual friend.

"Yes," remarked one of them, "she quarreled with Jack, and returned all his presents."

"Oh, really? And I suppose he very naturally returned hers?"

"Every one of them," replied the other. "Why, he even went so far as to send her half a dozen boxes of face powder, with a note explaining that since he first met her he must have taken that much home on his coat."—London Opinion.

That Boy Again.

"Why, your hair is black, Mrs. Wopson."

"Of course it is, Johnny. Did you think it was some other color?"

"Yesum, 'cause I heard my father tell my mother that when Mr. Wopson stayed out late you got red-headed."
